Iditarod is closing in and still wondering if you are interested in riding my 2nd sled out of Anchorage? The other option is an Iditarider which rides in the sled but is chosen by the highest bidder.all proceeds go to Iditarod .Please let us know ASAP and we can get into specifics or I can choose some one other than yourself if you are unable. Bruce is coming over to our place tomorrow morning (Saturday) beginning at 10 a.m. for a few hours to nail down the accuracy of the factual statements in the state of the state. We have the draft you sent at the end of the regular work day today. If you noodle on it any more tonight or early tomorrow let us know. I expect we'll have it back to you by midafternoon and you should feel it is stabilized once again from a factual perspective.

Tell me what you think your word count target is, please. It's at 3095 as you sent it to us, I believe.

Thanks. I think the first thing to do is circle the numerically stated fact assertions in her draft that she just sent, then look back at the email trails to see if we're missing info on any.

Then, in light of the email trail and what we know, see if we can come up with one liners that accurately state the facts for her. (The specific areas off the top of my head are education, transportation, and DPS brown shirt counts.) I will get an education blurb written since I'm familiar with the ins and outs of those numbers. If you could do the brown shirt numbers and get a piece written for that one based on Kris Perry's email, that would be helpful. For the other fact assertions let's talk tonight (or communicate by email) and nail those down.

I think we focus on the governor's accuracy for this next draft before we pare back any more for her. I'd like us to shoot to have something back to her Saturday afternoon or evening--just one draft that we each sign off on as being as accurate as we know it so she doesn't have to compare a draft fr me and one from you. Look forward to talking with you.

Bruce,

Can we get a list together of those facts that need to be checked, compare to the email traffic we've been seeing, and get changes on paper so the governor can lessen her frustration level from having to deal directly with agency folks on this. (I spoke with her again on the education numbers so I have a sense for what she wants. Kris, I think is still getting brown shirt numbers.) The governor is currently editing a draft on her computer in the office and will send a latest version to us when she's done.

I can work over the weekend at varying points. My home phone is 522-6499 and my cell is Privileged. I fly to Juneau on Monday-Wednesday.

Brown Shirts: Current 96 positions authorized: 87 are working, and 9 positions are being recruited. For the upcoming leg cycle, the dept has asked for 3 more AWT trooper positions, the long term strategic goal is to reach 120 AWT troopers which would restore the Division to the 1985 timeframe level.

Labor: 2007 unemployment rate: 6.1 percent (or an employment rate of 96.9%). 6.7 percent in 2006. Forecast for 2008 is 2,000 jobs / 0.6% (down from 3,500 in 2007, 1.1%). For 20 consecutive years Alaska's job count has grown. It's the longest uninterrupted stretch of growth since statehood and one that only seven other states can match. 2007 was a strong year for the oil and gas industry, which added 1,200 annualized jobs.

Suicide: Alaska has consistently ranked either #1 or #2 in the nation with our suicide rate. Last available nationwide data ranked us top at 23.6%.

Subject: Nikolski Fuel Crisis Update - January 11th, 2008

Dear All,

Nikolski placed a fuel order in July and has yet to receive the delivery. The lack of fuel has stopped community projects, threatened property and the health of community members, and created an economic emergency due to the use of dedicated monies to charter in small amounts of very expensive fuel. To date, the Nikolski IRA has incurred over $48,000 of expenses in drums of fuel and a total of 8 air and marine charters. As of the last update, the barge was circling near Nikolski, awaiting a weather break.

We are sorry to report that the situation in Nikolski has only worsened. The barge left Nikolski without delivering fuel on Tuesday night, reportedly due to weather. The barge will service Cold Bay and Perryville before returning to fuel Nikolski. The earliest possible delivery would be January 18th but likely later due to forecasted weather. An additional problem are the undelivered heavy equipment repair parts that were on the barge, leaving air service unsecured as the runway cannot be properly cleared.

The community will need more fuel before the new delivery date estimate, as a number of homes are out of heating oil and the power plant is using more fuel than recently as homes are being heated with electric heaters. APIA is currently working with Nikolski to arrange another small boat delivery of between 17 and 24 drums. APIA will meet with Delta Western this afternoon to plan for the interim response.

Please note, the financial situation for Nikolski has not been resolved, and there are no new funding sources to provide emergency fuel to the village. The cost of the boat charter and fuel is about $10,000. Nikolski Tribal Government has exhausted their available operations funds and is now spending out the funds needed to support the staff of local government for 2008.

We will be looking for the assistance of state, federal, and private entities to help respond to this crisis. Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Additional updates will follow. In case there are any immediate needs after hours or over the weekend, please call me at 250-9686.

MAT-SU KING HOLIDAY EVENT PREMIERS INDIE FILMS, YOUTH SCHOLARSHIP, BAZAAR

The Mat-Su premier of two extraordinary films takes place at the upcoming community event celebrating Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a national icon of non-violent protest and the 1960s Civil Rights Movement.

Premiered last June in Anchorage, Anchorage Is Our Home is a film that reveals a community's struggle to embrace diversity. "Wherever we live is our home and we share our home with different kinds of people. It seems we're still learning how to celebrate differences meaningfully, with respect," says Mollie Boyer, one of the film's producers and a Valley resident.

Boyer, Erick Cordero, and Marie Husa interviewed youths and adults from diverse ethnicities and cultural traditions. The trio produced the film as members of Alaska Humanities Forum's Leadership Anchorage Program in partnership with Healing Racism in Anchorage, an organization that provides classes to help understand and interrupt the cycle of racism.

The awarded short film Silences by Octavio Warock-Graham is a memoir about growing up biracial in a small, all-white Eastern town. "This film is so powerful. Octavio asks really hard questions of his white mother, grandmother, and others, including his black father, who he meets for the first time as an adult," says Kim-Marie Walker, a Valley resident. Walker viewed Silences at a Chicago conference for transracial adoption and Americans who identify as biracial or multiracial.

This year's theme, A New Generation for a New Day, is aimed at Valley youth. Scholarship applications, funded by the Mat-Su MLK Jr. Foundation, will be available for high school seniors going to college in the fall. Other highlights include a day-long program of speakers, entertainers, and like last year, a King Holiday Bazaar featuring craft and business vendors.

The 6th annual Mat-Su King Holiday event is free and open to the public: Monday, January 21, 11:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m., at the Wasilla Multi-Use Sports Complex, 1001 S. Mack Drive. Interested vendors and performers can still sign-up. For more information call 376-1566 or E-mail: matsumlkjr@gmail.com.

Subject: Tribute to Dr. Keon Chi

To: CSG Members and Friends
From: Dan Sprague, CSG Executive Director

As you may have heard, our beloved Dr. Keon Chi died in a tragic traffic accident Wednesday evening Jan. 9. Funeral services will be held at 2 p.m. Sunday, Jan. 13 at Georgetown College, John L. Hill Chapel, in Georgetown, Ky.

Keon was a nationally renowned and esteemed state government expert. He was CSG's editor-in-chief of The Book of the States, the premier annual reference book on American state government, and more recently became the Director of CSG's nascent Center for State Governance Transformation.

As I said to my staff and colleagues on Thursday morning, we have lost an incredibly gifted and truly treasured human being. This is a devastating loss for all who know Keon.

In addition to his seminal work with CSG since 1981, including authorship of more than 100 journal articles, monographs, book chapters and columns on cutting-edge issues, Keon also served on the editorial and review boards of Public Administration Review, State and Local Government Review, American Journal of Public Administration and ASPA's Public Integrity Journal. He also served on the Kennedy School's Innovation Panel at Harvard University.

Keon was a professor and academic dean at Georgetown

College, where he taught government and political science for 36 years mentoring and inspiring literally thousands of college students. He held masters' and doctoral degrees in government from Claremont Graduate University in California.

Due to his national reputation, Keon was often invited to speak to state legislative committees, national organizations, and frequently was a spokesperson with the American Political Science Association, the American Society of Public Administration, and the World Future Society.

Keon is survived by his wife In Soon, his two sons Ron and John and their families, including three grandchildren.

I am in conversations with CSG's current and past leaders and staff, along with the Chi family, about how CSG plans to acknowledge Keon's extraordinary contributions tied to our future service to states. We will be sharing our memorial plans with you in the near future, we hope you can be a part of this commemoration of our dearest friend and colleague.

ISER Research Matters No. 27. Understanding Alaska's Remote Rural Economy
January 11, 2008

A new ISER publication describes an economy unlike that anyplace else in the United States: the economy of the vast remote region of northern and western Alaska. At 395,000 square miles, the remote rural region is large enough to hold Japan, Germany, and Great Britain. Yet only about 60,000 people live there, and most households keep themselves going with a mix of cash, subsistence, sharing, and non-cash trading. That's a world away from the state's urban economy, and under standard measures like income the remote rural economy lags far behind.

Over the years there have been many efforts to improve that economy. But the new paper by ISER economist Scott Goldsmith argues that standard measures can't capture all the economic activity in a region where subsistence and non-cash trading play such important parts. Also, there are many gaps in the available data. This new paper offers the most comprehensive picture possible, based on available data—and at the same time identifies other information that could improve the picture and make economic development efforts more effective.

- Most of the state's natural resource wealth is produced in remote rural areas—about $17 billion worth in 2006—but more than 90% of that wealth bypasses the remote economy. It is government that directly or indirectly accounts for almost all (perhaps as much as 90%) of the income of regional residents. Local benefits from resource production—through local resource taxes, jobs, and activities of Alaska Native regional corporations—are concentrated in a few areas.
- A big share of the money that does come into the remote rural economy quickly leaks out again, because so many of the workers (an estimated 40%) are non-locals who spend their paychecks elsewhere, and because residents and local businesses buy many things outside the region. Of the estimated $2.35 billion that entered the remote rural economy as a result of natural resource production and government spending in 2006, about $1 billion quickly leaked out to other areas.
- Official employment figures underestimate the time residents of remote areas spend working, because they can't take into account time spent in subsistence activities and the informal economy. If such time could be included, employment would be larger than published data show and would have a more complex seasonal pattern.
- Thousands of young people in remote areas will soon reach working age, and that growth in the labor force, combined with the constraints on the types of cash jobs the economy can support, will create special challenges for residents. To find jobs, many will need to get specialized training, commute to jobs, or move to areas with more jobs.

- There are opportunities for economic growth in remote areas. But importing goods and services will continue to be expensive, and future government spending will be constrained. Cash will continue to be scarce, and subsistence and informal economic activities will continue to be extremely valuable.

Fagan is sounding more and more like a nagging wife

All right Dan Fagan -- enough! Everyone knows how you feel about Gov. Sarah Palin. You have made that clear. It is also getting to be really boring for us ("What if the oil industry isn't lying?" Dec. 30).

I used to love listening to Fagan -- so entertaining and he really used to leave me with points to ponder.

Frankly, he is sounding more and more like a nagging wife and you know what is said about nagging wives: Better to be alone in a barren desert than to be harassed with a nagging wife. So, I'm out.

No more Fagan for me until his attitude improves and he gives us what we came to love about him in the first place.

One last question for Fagan. Where was your big flippin' floppin' flappin' mouth when Frank Murkowski was in there screwing over every Alaskan, including you?

Governor,

I talked to Karleen and she is going to send you an update on potential cases as well as a description of changes/improvements being made at OCS. She will send the information tomorrow. I hope that is soon enough. She did not expect anything to be out in tomorrow's news.

Subject: AMHS Schedule / Publishing deadline for the Milepost

Governor:

I met with Deputy Commissioner Hardy and Captain Falvey of AMHS. They assured me AMHS will continue working with the Milepost and will get the schedule information to them in time to meet the publishing deadline.

Heard from Karen Rehfeld, she'll have your numbers within an hour.

Privileged or Personal Material Redacted

Brown Shirts: Current 96 positions authorized: 87 are working, and 9 positions are being recruited. For the upcoming leg cycle, the dept has asked for 3 more AWT trooper positions, the long term strategic goal is to reach 120 AWT troopers which would restore the Division to the 1985 timeframe level.

Labor: 2007 unemployment rate: 6.1 percent (or an employment rate of 96.9%). 6.7 percent in 2006. Forecast for 2008 is 2,000 jobs / 0.6% (down from 3,500 in 2007, 1.1%). For 20 consecutive years Alaska's job count has grown. It's the longest uninterrupted stretch of growth since statehood and one that only seven other states can match. 2007 was a strong year for the oil and gas industry, which added 1,200 annualized jobs.

Suicide: Alaska has consistently ranked either #1 or #2 in the nation with our suicide rate. Last available nationwide data ranked us top at 23.6%.

If you'd like me to send a word document so it is easier to cut and paste, I'll do that.
